

Underwater areas provide food for land and water animals. For example, man eats fish, fish eat shrimp and shrimp eat detritus (decaying plants). This is one example of a simple food chain. All living things in nature depend upon each other for survival.